Biography

https://www.wikitree.com/wiki/Longe-48

Henry Longe of Waddon was a member of the merchant taylor family of Semington, Trowbridge and Whaddon, Wiltshire; and Beckington and Stratton-on-the-Fosse, Somerset.[1] The PhD thesis of John Gaisford explores workings of the merchants of West Wiltshire in this time period, and the relationships between them. This includes the Longe family to which Henry Longe belonged. He and his three brothers were called "probably the most dynamic clothier family in west Wiltshire." [2]

In 1554, Henry Long I bought from Andrew Bayntun the manor of Whaddon with its mansion house and fulling mill on the Semington Brook, just south of the Avon; around the same time he also acquired the lease of Monkton, on the north bank of the Avon.[3]

His father was another taylor, Henry Long of Semington who left a will dated 1535.[4] Online trees, including the FamilySearch site, make his father to be the same as the Henry Longe of Draycot Cerne who married Eleanor Wrottesley.[5] This is clearly in error as Henry Longe of Draycot Cerne died in 1558 and did not have a son Henry. He married Mary Horton, the daughter of Thomas Horton, another wealthy taylor.[6] They had 4 known children. Henry Longe of Whaddon died on 17 October 1558.[citation needed] He left a will probated on 17 November 1558.[7] His wife also died testate and her will was probated on 15 Oct 1562.[8] When Henry Long was dying in 1558, he clearly doubted the capacity of his eldest son Thomas, and left him only a house at Heywood near Westbury and the statutory one-third of his manor of Whaddon; the remainder of Whaddon with its 500 acres was bequeathed to his second son, Henry Long II, who succeeded to the clothing business.[9] His widow Mary evidently shared her husband's view on her eldest son, leaving him only £60, on condition that "he keep himself in honest demeanour and good behaviour and that he neither vex nor trouble my husband's executor nor overseers nor cause them to be vexed or troubled."

Birth

Born: Say 1510, possibly in Semington, Wiltshire which was his father's principle residence.

The date is a rough estimate based on his known career, and estimated dates of other family members. His grandson was born c1561, making estimates of his son being born about 1535, and his own birth about 1510 to be reasonable rough estimates.

He was the son the clothier Henry Longe of Semington who died testate in 1535. Note that suggestions that he was the son of Henry Longe of Draycot Cerne who married Eleanor Wrottesley is clearly an error.

Marriage and Children

Married: Mary Horton about 1535. She was the daughter of Thomas Horton of Westwood and Margaret Barksdale of Keevil.[10] They had four known children. Mary died testate before 15 October 1562 when her will was proved.[11]

Children of Henry Longe and Mary Horton:[12]

- 1. Thomas Longe of Semington (1539-1593).

Anne Longe , married William Yerbury, d. 1609.

- 1. Henry II Longe of Whaddon (c 1540-1610). He married Mary May.
- 2. Edward Longe of Monkton (c. 1545-1622). He married Anne Brounker.

Death

Died: Henry Longe died 17 October 1558 in Semington, Wiltshire, England, where he is buried.[citation needed]

Origins

Henry Longe (d. 1535) left four sons according to his will. Along with many families they married into, they all became successful and influential merchants.

- Robert of London, Mercer, c. 1506-1552, married Cecily Copinger, widow, d. 1559 [13]
- Thomas of Trowbridge, c. 1508-1562, married Joan Yerbury of Batcombe, d. 1582[13]
- Henry of Whaddon, c. 1510-1558, married Mary Horton, d. 1558 [13]
- William of Beckington, c. 1515-1558. [13]

Biography The Longs of South Wraxall were said by Leland to have been 'set up by one of the old Lords Hungerford'; by the mid 15th century they had become one of the leading families in Wiltshire. Through the Darrells Sir Thomas Long was connected both with the Barons Stourton and with the Seymours, his sister-in-law Elizabeth having married John Seymour of Wolf Hall, grandfather of the Protector, and it was he who acquired Draycot Cerne, which was to become the family's main seat. His eldest son Henry Long also held property in Hampshire and London when he sued out a pardon in 1509: almost a year before, Richard Beauchamp, Lord St. Amand, had bequeathed to Long a remainder in the manor of Charlton, Wiltshire, and an annuity of 40s. Henry Long is not known to have been related to the rich clothier of the same name who lived at Whaddon, although his will contains a mention of a 'friend' Thomas Long of Trowbridge, the clothier's brother.5

When Edmund Dudley was indicted in 1509 he was accused of having summoned Long, John

Mompesson and other gentlemen to aid him in arms. Long was evidently unharmed by the ex-minister's fall, for he was among the courtiers who jousted at Greenwich in June 1510 and three years later he commanded a company in France and was knighted at Tournai. He entered into a number of recognizances, and was twice listed among those who owed money to the King, before being named with other envoys to France in 1518.6

In Wiltshire Long was often charged by his tenants and neighbours with high-handed behaviour. Thomas Yorke, thrice sheriff in the 1520s and 30s, accused Long of rescuing his son-in-law Michael Quentin from custody, and still graver allegations were made by Walter Fynamore and his son Richard, who had successfully defended themselves against Long in a chancery suit over lands, whereupon Long had incited various poor men to plague them with further actions and had secured writs, addressed to himself as sheriff, which allowed him to behave 'more like an oppressor, cruel tyrant and extortioner than an indifferent executor and minister'. The elder Fynamore and others had been arrested and virtually held to ransom. Long waged another feud with Richard Camme, abbot of Malmesbury, eventually securing his indictment before a packed jury as an accessory to murder. At the following quarter sessions in Marlborough, Long and his friends again selected the jury, rebuking Sir William Essex and other demurring justices 'with such slanderous and opprobrious words as were not convenient to be spoken', and extracted a favourable verdict.7

Long corresponded with Cromwell, whom he thanked for favouring his brother Richard, and in 1533 he served at the coronation feast of Anne Boleyn: in the spring of 1536 he recounted his part in the suppression of a riot at Taunton. In 1540 he reported the vicar of Calne to be a suspected papist: he had himself enjoyed a corrody at Malmesbury since at least 1535 and he was to join his conservative neighbours Sir Anthony Hungerford and (Sir) John Brydges in asking for leniency to be shown towards Camme's successor as abbot over arrears due to the crown. As steward of Edington he sought leave from Cromwell for the rector to take walks outside the house, which had been forbidden by the visitors, and he was among the monastic commissioners whose reports in 1536 were more favourable than those of the royal agents in the previous year.8

Long was not returned for Wiltshire in 1529, when the knights of the shire were his uncle Sir Edward Darrell and Sir Edward Baynton. Darrell died on 9 Mar. 1530 and was almost certainly replaced by Long, whose name appears for Wiltshire on a list of nominees for vacancies drawn up by Cromwell in 1532 or early in 1533. That he had joined the House at the outset of the fifth session is shown by his inclusion in another of Cromwell's lists, believed to record the names of Members who opposed the bill in restraint of appeals in the spring of 1533: several of these were concerned with the wool and cloth trades and Long's appearance among them is probably to be explained in these terms. He probably also sat in the Parliament of 1536, for which no returns survive but to which the King asked to have the previous Members re-elected. In 1539, however, it was his son Robert who sat with Baynton, and Long himself is not known to have done so again until Mary's accession. If his absence from the Parliaments of 1539 and 1542 may be attributed to the fact that he was sheriff on both occasions, once in Somerset and once in Wiltshire, his omission from the next three seems to have been of his own volition: failing the shire, he could have represented Calne if he had wanted to, as that borough elected his son in 1545, his steward Griffin Curteys in or after 1547, and his son-in-law Robert Hungerford in the autumn of 1553.9

Long's continued activity both at court and in his county is proof that this intermission in his parliamentary career was not the result of royal disfavour: he attended Prince Edward's christening and the reception of Anne of Cleves, and although described as an old friend by Lord Hungerford, himself an ally of Cromwell, he seems to have been unaffected by the fall of these two great figures. More to the point were his financial straits: in 1537 he besought Cromwell to help him pay the wages of men needlessly raised against the northern rebels, for a time he mortgaged a manor in the parish of Calne and between 1542 and 1545 he engaged in at least five sales of land in Wiltshire.10

These years may also have seen a deterioration in Long's relations with his rising kinsmen the Seymours. He had earlier acted as a trustee with his cousin Sir John Seymour, and in September 1537 he had entertained Seymour's eldest son, the future Protector Somerset, at Draycot. Some 12 years

Thomas Long of Draycot

Sir Thomas Long of Draycot (c. 1451–1509) was an English politician.

Born in Wiltshire, the son of John Long and his wife Margaret Wayte, he succeeded to the Draycot estates on the death of his father on 20 September 1478, and inherited South Wraxall from his uncle Henry Long in 1490. Long was among the 'great compaignye of noble men' who went with Edward, Duke of Buckingham, in 1496 to meet the King at Taunton, then in pursuit of Perkin Warbeck. In 1501 he received a knighthood at the marriage of Henry VII's eldest son, Arthur, Prince of Wales, and he was also at the reception of Catherine of Aragon at Shaftesbury in October of that year.

Long was elected Member of Parliament for Westbury in 1491. He was appointed High Sheriff of Wiltshire in 1500 and again in 1506. He was present at the coronation of Henry VIII in 1509.

He married Margery, daughter of Sir George Darell, of Littlecote House,[1] and had one daughter and seven sons, including Sir Richard Long (c.1494-1546)? and Sir Henry Long (c.1489-.1556).

Long died in 1509 and his remains are entombed in a 'rich gothique altar monument' (as described by John Aubrey) in the church of St James at Draycot, Wiltshire. Hanging above his tomb until recently, and authenticated by the British Museum, were his armour Haume (helmet) and gauntlets, dating from c.1490. These are now safely kept in the Devizes Museum in Wiltshire.

Royal descendant

The present Charles, Prince of Wales is a descendant of Sir Thomas Long, as is Mark Phillips, the first husband of Anne, Princess Royal.[2] rose in prominence, gaining the favour of the King.

- In 1537 he was knighted, on 15 October in the celebrations following the baptism of Prince Edward, in which he was one of the bearers of the canopy held over the infant in the baptismal procession, and the same day that his kinsman Edward Seymour, 1st Duke of Somerset was created earl of Hertford. In 1538 Long was appointed Master of the Buckhounds and Master of the Hawks. By 1539, he was a Gentleman of the Privy Chamber, and was present at the reception of Anne of Cleves, also in 1539. He was MP for Southwark the same year. Surviving the fall of his patron Cromwell, Long became a prominent servant of the government throughout the 1540s. He was one of the most senior members of the privy chamber during these years and his intimacy with the King made him a useful agent for secret and covert affairs.
- Arriving in January 1541 at Calais to put its affairs in order, Long was described by the French ambassador, Charles de Marillac, bishop of Vienne, as 'a person of authority and conduct' (LP Henry VIII, 16.466). On his return he was instructed to arrest Sir John Wallop, a diplomat suspected of colluding with Cardinal Pole. This was a sensitive mission, and its failure was blamed not on Long, but on his kinsman Hertford. Later that year he worked on various commissions and juries dealing with the treason of Catherine Howard.
- Making use of Long's military experience, the government appointed him governor of Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark in 1541, a post that he held until retirement due to illness in 1545, and in 1542 he was appointed captain of Kingston upon Hull with power to levy forces whenever occasion required, and with a place on the king's council of the north.
- In a letter written by Henry VIII, he referred to Long as 'our trusty & right well-beloved Councillor, Sir Richard Long, Knt'. In 1542 Long gave the King a gift of a pair of purple satin stockings 'embrauded all over with pirls of damask gold and damask silver',[2] and the following year the King granted Long the manor of Shingay in Cambridgeshire.
- On 10 November 1541 he obtained the marriage settlement of Margaret Donnington, only daughter of John Donnington of Stoke Newington in Middlesex, and widow of Sir Thomas Kitson of Hengrave Hall, Suffolk. They had one son, Henry,[3] to whom the King stood as godfather in 1544,[citation needed] and three daughters, Jane, Katherine and Mary.[4] His granddaughter Elizabeth married William Russell, 1st Baron Russell of Thornhaugh.
- He received large grants of Abbey lands from Henry VIII, in Essex, Cambridge, Suffolk and elsewhere, and together with his marriage, meant that like his fellow courtiers Welsbourne and Walsh, he was a rich man at his death on 30 September 1546. His widow married John Bouchier, 2nd Earl of Bath, on 11 December 1548. She died on 20 December 1561 at Stoke Newington and was buried at Hengrave on 12 January 1562.
- From: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Sir_Richard_Long_\(c.1494-1546\))
- Sir Henry Long (ca. 1489—1556) was born in Wiltshire, eldest surviving son and heir of Sir Thomas Long of Draycot, landowner, of Draycot Cerne in Wiltshire, and his wife, Margery (d. in or after 1508), daughter of Sir George Darrell of Littlecote House in Wiltshire.
- Long was appointed High Sheriff of Wiltshire in 1512, 1526, 1536 and 1542, and High Sheriff of Somerset and Dorset in 1538. He replaced Sir Edward Darrell when the latter died as Member of Parliament for Wiltshire in 1532 and was re-elected in 1552. He was also Hereditary Bailiff of Charlton Wood and Keeper of Braden Forest, east of Malmesbury. Together with his brother Richard, he was present at the baptism of Prince Edward.[1]
- He inherited the manor of Stock & Stockley from his father and later purchased the manor of South Wraxall. Long was at the Siege of Boulogne, having the command of 200 men, whom he raised for that expedition. His Captain was severely wounded in an unsuccessful attack on the castle, 1 September 1544. He also accompanied Henry VIII to the Field of the Cloth of Gold and was knighted for making a gallant charge at Therouenne at Picardy in the sight of the King, for which he was granted a new crest, consisting of a lions head with a man's hand in its mouth.
- Long's close relationship with Henry VIII paid dividends at the Dissolution of the Monasteries, with grants of land in Wiltshire; Lyneham and Littlecote in Hilmarton, together with the rectory, great tithes and advowson of the vicarage of Lyneham, all formerly belonging to Bradenstoke Priory. He leased the manor of Fasteerne from Catherine Parr who, after the death of her husband Henry VIII, had re-married Sir Thomas Seymour, brother of Protector Somerset. The Protector coveted Fasteerne, and negotiated with Sir Henry Long to resign his lease. When she heard of this, Catherine was highly indignant. She was not on good terms with the Protector, because he had declined to give her some valuable jewels which, as she maintained, King Henry had given her for her own. She vowed she would stop the Protector getting his hands on the Fasteerne lease, and would go herself "tomorrow, Saturday, at three o'clock" to the young King Edward, and give full utterance to her feelings against the Protector, his uncle. But the formidable uncle-Protector of the realm was not to be meddled with. Whether she kept her promise, and how far she succeeded in getting the diamonds, is not clear, but Somerset succeeded in getting Fasteerne. Sir Henry Long somewhat unwillingly parted with it for a sum of money and the office of Ranger of Braden Forest for his life.
- Long married firstly, Jane (or Frydeswyde), daughter of Sir John Hungerford and Margaret Blount. He married secondly, Eleanor, daughter of Sir Richard Wrottesley and Dorothy Sutton. He had several children with both his wives, including Sir Robert Long. Sir Henry Long died 8 October 1556 and is buried at Draycot in Wiltshire. His second wife died about 1543

Sir John Stourton sat on the Privy Council of Henry VI. He was appointed November 13, 1437 at a council held at the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, London.

On Feb. 14, 1436 Henry had issued writs to the Privy council for men and funds from the peers to send an army into France under the Duke of York . John Stourton was specifically named to serve under the king in the wars in France with four men at arms and 111 archers.

On April 18, 1437 he was sent to France by Henry as an ambassador to treat for peace.

The small fragment that is left of the Assize Roll of this year contains no notice of these suits. In the first of them William de Wrottesley was evidently suing respecting land he had obtained in marriage with his wife Petronilla, and we obtain from it some clue to her identity. Blore and Grindon on the Moors was held at this date by a younger branch of the house of Audley, and I conclude, therefore, that William was married to a daughter of John de Audley of Blore, who had died circa 1280.

[\[edit\]](#) Marriage and issue

In about 1266 in Northamptonshire, she married Sir Roger La Zouche, Lord of Ashby, the son of Sir Alan La Zouche and Helen de Quincy. Their marriage produced one son:

Alan la Zouche, 1st Baron la Zouche of Ashby (19 October 1267- 25 March 1314), married Eleanor de Segrave, by whom he had three daughters.

Ela died on about 19 July 1276 at the age of 32. Her younger sister Emmeline, co-heiress to their father and the wife of the 3rd Lord of Offaly, did not bear any children; thus when she died in 1291, her property was inherited by Maud La Zouche, Baroness Holland, the daughter of Ela's only son, Alan.
